About the Current Sociology

The demand for international and Indian sociology journals and magazines is high among sociologists and researchers worldwide. They provide a platform for the dissemination of research findings, theoretical debates, and critical analysis of social issues from a cross-cultural perspective. International current sociology journals and magazines are Sociology Compass, American Sociological Review, European Sociological Review, and Social Forces.

These sociology journals and magazines typically require high-quality, peer-reviewed articles. There are many Indian sociology magazines and journals available on our online platform for subscription. These journals and magazines cater to the needs of Indian sociologists and researchers. They focus on Indian society, culture, and politics, providing a platform for the publication of research findings and critical analysis of social issues specific to India. The demand for these journals is high among scholars working on Indian sociology and social issues.

The requirements for publication in these journals and magazines vary, but generally, they seek original research articles, theoretical debates, crisis analyses of social issues, and book reviews. The submission guidelines usually include instructions on formatting, citation styles, word count, and submission deadlines. They also require a rigorous peer-review process and adherence to ethical standards in research.
